

HOLY TRINITY CATHOLIC CHURCH

March 30, 2025

Fourth Sunday of Lent

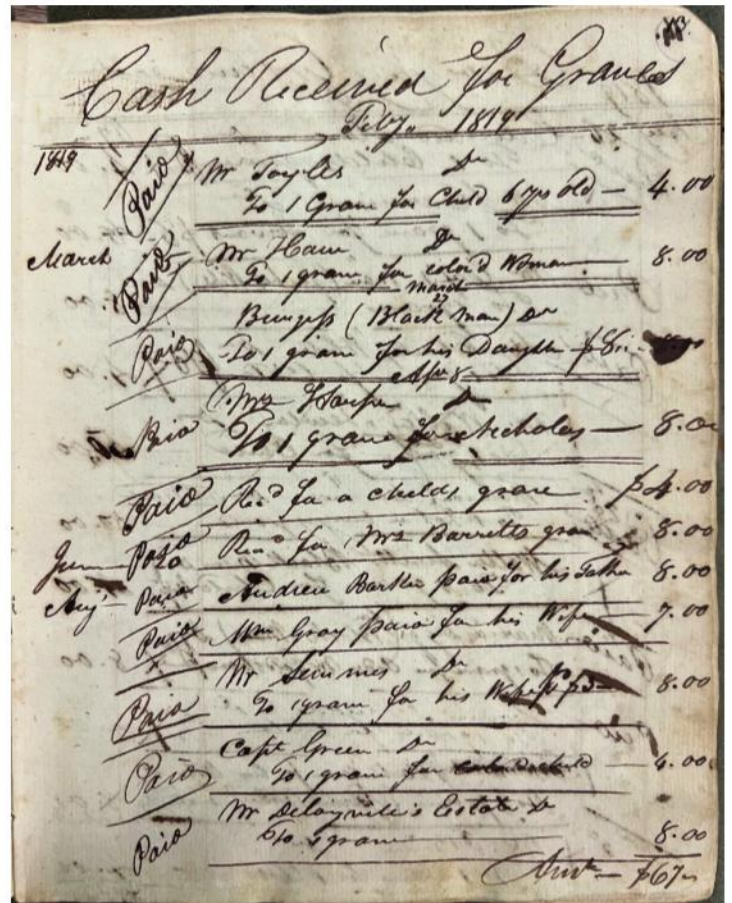

The College Ground Cemetery

by Peter J. Albert,
Holy Trinity History Committee

In 1817, Benedict Fenwick, S.J., at the time both pastor of Holy Trinity and president of Georgetown College, opened a “new burying ground” for the parish. Set in the northeast corner of the Georgetown campus, it would replace Holy Trinity’s existing cemetery, which was located next to the church. The new ground served as the main parish cemetery until 1833, when the Upper Grave Yard, later called Holy Rood Cemetery, was opened.

Fr. Fenwick divided his new cemetery – the College Ground – into two parts, one “for the poor” (where there was no charge for the graves) and the other “for those who pay.” His cemetery “Regulations” did not segregate the cemetery racially, but specified that “None but Catholics” were to be buried there.

Some 900 Holy Trinity parishioners died between 1818 and 1833, and since some burials in the College Ground continued after that, historian Carlton Fletcher estimates that the total number buried there was near 1,000. In the 1950s, the university transferred the remains of some 50 bodies, “more or less,” from the College Ground to Mount Olivet Cemetery to make room for expansion, leading Fletcher to conclude “that ninety-five percent of the people buried in the College Ground were left there.”

Comparing the number of burials recorded in the cemetery account book between 1819 and 1822 (131), the years when its information is most complete, with the number of deaths recorded in those years in Holy Trinity’s parish death register (262), suggests that as many as half those who died may have been buried in the “poor” section, which would have included both Whites and African Americans. By comparison, between 1835 and 1840, 58% (197) of Holy Trinity’s burials were gratis burials.

Between 1818 and 1822, the cemetery account book notes the burials of some 29 African Americans in the for-pay section of the College Ground, comprising 19% of all those buried in the for-pay section of the College Ground in those years. How many African Americans were buried in the “poor” section we cannot say, but between 1821 and 1828, Holy Trinity’s parish death register indicates that African Americans accounted for at least 26% of the deaths recorded in the parish.

Reading through the entries recording interments in the College Ground between 1818 and 1822, one is struck by the sheer number of children who were buried – of the 156 burials recorded in these years, 81 (52%) were interments of children, that is, those under 12 years of age. Stunning as these numbers may appear to us, they are close to the historical average of childhood deaths in the United States for this period.

In 1820, shortly after the establishment of the College Ground cemetery, the cemetery account book begins to note burials at half or less than the price stipulated in the Cemetery Regulations. This range of pricing – burials at full-pay, at half-pay, and gratis – was a practice that was then followed at Holy Rood Cemetery in the following years.

Unlike the Regulations for the College Ground, the Regulations for the Upper Grave Yard, dated 1835, clearly specified that cemetery’s racial segregation, with one area for African Americans and another for Whites. Between 1832 and 1840, Holy Trinity’s death register recorded 432 burials in the Upper Grave Yard. Of these, 241 (56%) were White burials and 191 (44%) were African American burials.

This is only a brief glance at some of the salient features of the account book kept in conjunction with the College Ground cemetery. For a more substantial look, see “Two Early Holy Trinity Cemeteries – the College Ground and the Upper Grave Yard,” by Peter J. Albert newly posted at trinity.org/history-committee/

PARISH PASTORAL COUNCIL SEEKS FOUR MEMBERS

Beginning in May, parishioners will be electing four parishioners to the Parish Pastoral Council (PPC). PPC members are advisors to the pastor, and assist the pastor in discerning, articulating, and communicating to other parishioners the identity and mission of the parish. They also work with the pastor and parish community to assure fidelity of the parish's activities to that identity and mission. PPC members serve three-year terms.

Please consider whether this is your time to serve, encourage our fellow parishioners to serve, and vote in support of candidates you believe will best serve our beloved parish. If you are interested in learning more, please join us at our regular monthly PPC meeting on April 16 for an open Q&A on the role of the PPC and the responsibilities of its members. All are welcome either in person or by Zoom.

IGNATIAN SPIRITUALITY RESOURCES FOR DIFFICULT TIMES

Please see the Ignatian Spirituality Resources trinity.org/ignatian-spirituality/resources/ page (right under the Lenten resources) for articles, videos, and book recommendations for navigating our current times with God's help
