March 8, 2026

Third Sunday of Lent

Holy Trinity Church - A Glimpse From The Past

By Peter J. Albert, Holy Trinity History Committee

What did our church look like when it was newly built? Here's a description of the church that we've discovered in a Georgetown newspaper of the time:

The first view obtained on approaching is of the south side, about one hundred and thirty feet long, the eaves about fifty feet high, the exterior walls in imitation of white marble, the windows tall and narrow, probably twenty feet high and five wide, and semicircular at the top. While the impressions produced by this view are very pleasing, there are two subjects that occasion regret. The first is, that the beautiful range of windows should be interrupted near the west end to give place to a door for the gallery; the second, that this specimen of classic architecture should be also marred by the anachronism of a steeple and spire reaching to the altitude of about seventy-five feet from the ground – very elegant to be sure, and yet bringing to mind a sentry box or the wheel-house of a western steamboat. (1) The front view presents a pretty portico of Ionic structure, but so shallow as at once to exclude the shade essential to a good effect and all thoughts of utility. ...

The interior is throughout admirable in taste and adaptation. Its proportions are about as follows: length 120 feet, width 65, height 40. On entering the main door at the west, the view is highly beautiful. The principal altar occupies the centre of the eastern end, and stands in a recess more detached in appearance from the main portion of the church than is usual. To the right and left of this are two neat vestry-rooms. In front of these rooms, against the partition-wall, are two small altars. Above these altars and vestry-rooms are two galleries, which communicate with each other above and in the rear of the main altar. The northern gallery will be occupied by the organ and choir; the southern, by the scholastics and students of the college.

The accommodations for the congregation can best be viewed from the altar. As you stand here there appears a slight ascent of the floor toward the western end. This ascent is not more, however, than six or eight inches. There are no side galleries. (2) That over the main door contains thirty pews, designed for colored people, which are, in our opinion, the most desirable pews in the church. On the main floor there are one hundred and sixty-four pews. From the altar they have the appearance of being all of St. Domingo mahogany; but on a near inspection it is found that only the upper portions of the backs are made of this material, the rest being of the best Carolina yellow pine, simply coated with transparent varnish, except the ends next the aisles, and these are of cast-iron bronzed, and of very tasteful pattern. . . . From within, the windows present a lovely appearance; they are of stained glass, of varied combinations, no two being alike. The walls are plastered in imitation of white marble blocks. . . . The ceiling is very slightly vaulted and painted in most exquisite style in imitation of a dome. Its very slight concavity and skilful painting produce an illusion from which it is hard to escape. Upon it the eye will often dwell in the effort to ascertain the true curves of this intricate canopy.

The whole effect of the edifice, both without and within, with the exception of the perhaps hyper-critical objections we have proffered, is pleasing in a very high degree. There is much elegant taste displayed throughout. The proportions are in good keeping, and a quiet order seems to prevail that cannot fail to impress every one most agreeably. The execution of the work appears to us to be perfect. Literally, this church is built upon a rock, and the superstructure has been made to correspond with its firm foundation. We are informed that its cost will not exceed twenty-two or twenty-three thousand dollars. . . .

1. The steeple was subsequently removed.
2. While side galleries were later added for the seating of Black parishioners, these galleries were removed in the 1880s.
