Thirtieth Sunday in Ordinary Time

A Gen X Jesuit In Georgetown

by John Pignone, S.J.

To me, Georgetown always seemed like the Promised Land. Growing up in the DC area, it was the destination when we would talk about going into the city: the heart of where everything was. I remember thinking how cool Commander Salamander's was on Wisconsin Avenue when we would drive by it.

I remember going on my first real date at a decent restaurant on 31st Street and having two dollars left over when everything was paid in full. I remember after we left the restaurant buying a final flower for that date from a guy on the street, only to, awkwardly, find out it actually cost three dollars. I had to ask her for an extra buck to cover the cost, and never saw her again.

When I was doing my undergrad work at the University of Maryland, I remember taking a class at Georgetown one fall. I didn't need the class - I just wanted to be a part of the town and be able to tell someone without exaggeration that I had business here.

Imagine my thoughts when my Provincial, the head Jesuit on the East Coast who decides where to send us for assignments, asked me to e-mail him which parish I felt particularly called to for my first mission as a priest. It wasn't really a question for me. DC is my home, and Georgetown is the heart of it. I had been away for a while and just wanted to go back home.

Now that it has been a few months, when my friends ask how things are going I have a line I give them. I say it is like being on a highway and trying to keep up with traffic.

Right about now, I am in fourth gear. I'm getting there. When I arrived here on the Fourth of July weekend, it was like the gas pedal was on the floor but the car was going thirty-five. Cars were flying by me, but instead of honking or throwing dirty looks, they were all waving hello. They were saying, "Welcome to the highway, you'll get up to speed soon enough. This is friendly traffic."

I have come to find that Holy Trinity is very friendly DC traffic. There is so much going on here. I think Father Gillespie said there are over eighty programs run out of this complex. There are so many people who give of themselves to this parish and have taken initiative in various ways that one would be hard pressed to find a more vibrant and well-rounded community anywhere around.

I am in awe of the people here. Not only are they impressive by sheer volume, they are exceptionally kind and welcoming. At the end of the day, when I reflect on all the graces God has given me, again and again the things that cascade across my mind's eye are kind eyes and warm smiles. I feel as though I have been enveloped in a loving community and, indeed, feel at home in very friendly DC traffic.

So, now I find myself getting a bit more confident. I fumble a bit less with the book and the wine and the water. I remember to go counterclockwise around the altar with the incense at the 11:30 Mass instead of clockwise. I remember to turn my mic off when I start giving out communion and to turn it on again when I give the blessing to the Eucharistic Ministers sent to the homebound. And I remember to thank God every day for sending me here.

I'm getting there. This little car is almost ready to be thrown into fifth gear. I am no longer a safety hazard on the highway. But even when I was feeling wobbly this past summer you all saw the "Please have patience, New Driver" bumper sticker slapped to the back of my car and continued to be kind to me. I am deeply grateful.

I live in Georgetown now. I have business here. Those two things would be astounding on their own. But what is more is that I am home at Holy Trinity because you opened the doors to me. I am home because you are patient with me. I am home because we are together here in this crazy, fun, DC traffic of ours.

I am grateful to you for welcoming me and for your patience as I learn how to do this and I am forever grateful to God for bringing me to you.
