The Blue Violin

By Colleen Conroy, Maria Madre Committee

On a recent sun swept August afternoon, the notes of Aaron Copeland's "Appalachian Spring" wafted from a patio of the "Fe y Alegria School" into the narrow streets of La Chacra, an impoverished barrio in San Salvador. The melodies arose from the violins of thirty-five students, ranging in age range from ten to seventeen. The concert marked a milestone in an effort by Holy Trinity parishioners to expand musical opportunities for local children.

In January of 2023, on a visit to our sister parish in El Salvador, Maria Madre de los Pobres, I was introduced to Jimena, a charming Salvadoran pre-teen. When Jimena expressed a desire to learn to play the violin, I was determined to provide an instrument for her use.

Back in Washington, I was thrilled to receive an anonymously donated violin resting in a blue case. Hopes were dashed, however, when Jimena's parents denied its use until her studies improved. My fiddle became an orphan until our delegation toured the Fe y Alegra school adjacent to Maria Madre and we met Doña Sylvia, an enthusiastic woman who told us of her desire to expand her fledging violin program, then limited to fifteen players due to the lack of instruments.

EUREKA! My blue violin had found a home.

She explained the importance of the program in the lives of children living in La Chacra. In a video interview, filmed by fellow parishioner Ash Hawken, she stated that learning to read and play music is a stabilizing element for children whose families are fractured and their lives chaotic and uncertain. "Mastery of music," she said, "contributes to their cognitive, emotional, and social development and nurtures their overall learning."

Sylvia's words and the sight of her determined young players planted the seeds for Ash and my commitment to double the program over a three year period and we returned to Washington to get things started. That effort put us in touch with Jenna Day, who, with her husband

Jason, are proprietors of Day Violins, an entity that is a center for the rental, sales and teaching of stringed instruments. Jenna's Morman missionary assignments in Latin America gave her fluency in Spanish. She wished to help. She could provide violins.

In dialog with Fe y Alegria authorities, we settled on an arrival date. The packing, shipping and customs clearing of twenty-seven violins, with their associated bows, extra strings, cleaning and teaching materials presented a happy challenge. When we unpacked the four cardboard cartons at the school and laid them out in their black cases alongside the fifteen already in service, my eyes were drawn to one in their midst. It was my beautiful bule violin, an orphan no more.

Already, visiting Holy Trinity visitors to our sister parish are enjoying the children's concerts, and discussing ways in which they can assist the program. Day Violins is committed to shepherd the program over time. There are plans to augment the types of string instruments, so that chamber groups and more varied string ensembles can be organized. Through Day Violins' 501(c.3) Foundation, supporters will be able to assist the group's growth financially.

Through the efforts of school children, the compositions of Bernstein, Mozart and Dvořák now enrich the ambiance of La Chacra. By their growing command of this music they create a culture of collegiality and mutual respect, lessons perhaps even more important that the musical virtuosity they strive to obtain.
